

Remote controlled delivery and release of biologically active compounds

Gleb Sukhorukov

Queen Mary College, University of London

Abstract

The talk reviews recent advances in area of fabrication of micro- and nanosized delivered systems enabling their navigation and delivery via remote physical influences such as magnetic field, light and ultrasound. Examples of physically triggered release from capsules and surface eluting coating are demonstrated in vitro, including cell cultures, and in vivo on small animals.